 25. Argument. Conclusion: Stealing is wrong simply because society disapproves of it.

Part B: Constructing Arguments

- *1. It is morally permissible to experiment on nonhuman animals.
 Premises: If it is not morally permissible to experiment on nonhuman animals, then all new medical treatments must be tried out initially on human subjects. But surely not all new medical treatments must be tried out initially on human subjects.
2. It is wrong to eat animals.
 Premises: Most people do not eat meat because they need it to live; rather, they eat meat because they like the taste. But this is not a good enough reason to justify killing animals.
3. Marijuana should be legalized.
 Premise: The prohibition of marijuana creates a lucrative underground market that is characterized by violence.
- *4. Only violent criminals should be imprisoned.
 Premises: Sending people to prison tends to make them worse. And there are ways of controlling non-violent criminals without sending them to prison.
5. Handguns should be outlawed.
 Premise: The vast majority of people who are either murdered or killed accidentally are shot with handguns.
6. Society has an obligation to provide housing for the homeless.
 Premise: In general, we have an obligation to help those less fortunate than ourselves.
- *7. Americans are too individualistic.
 Premises: Most Americans insist on using their own vehicles as opposed to public transportation. And this pattern of behavior causes severe damage to the environment.
8. The world is overpopulated with humans.
 Premises: Environmental problems result when too many people live in a given geographical area. And there are currently serious environmental problems in virtually every country around the globe.
9. It is foolish to live in a modern city.
 Premises: In a modern city the pace of life is inhuman, the crime rate is high, the air quality is often poor, and the traffic is dangerous.
- *10. Beauty is in the eye of the beholder.
 Premise: People often disagree about whether a given person or work of art is beautiful, whereas they seldom disagree about the shape or weight of an object.
11. Large corporations have too much political power.
 Premises: Corporations can influence politics quite significantly by contributing large financial gifts to those running for public office. And what's good for large corporations isn't necessarily good for the average citizen.
12. Nuclear deterrence is irrational.
 Premises: The effects of a nuclear war are well known and simply horrible. It is irrational for nations to threaten each other with nuclear weapons when the obvious alternative of multilateral disarmament is available.
